Be Thankful for What You Have

As the semester draws to a close, it is important to take a step back and not only look at how far we have come in our given departments, but also to recognize the hard workers who have gotten you to where you are today.

Take a couple of extra minutes to get to know who they are as individuals and discover how they like to be appreciated in their own way. Remember the 5 love languages, words of affirmation, physical touch, quality time, acts of service, and gifts, but also learn if the individuals like to be recognized publicly or privately. This can make all the difference when boosting morale, building a strong team, and continuing your great work for future semesters to come!

Tuesdays with Morrie

Tuesdays with Morrie is easily one of the best novels we have reviewed on book club this year. Whereas previous reviewed novels have gone into the professional side of Student Affairs, Tuesdays with Morrie cuts to the core of who we are as humans and discusses topics such as love, forgiveness, compassion and death. Written by a student who interviews his old college professor about the meaning of life, it is hard not to think of similar professors who have made a similar impact on the reader's life as well. The book captures each character on such a deep level so that there is a flood of emotions which hit you by the end of the book. It looks at death especially from a rarely seen lens and makes it more manageable and understandable. Although written more than 20 years ago, this novel holds true today just as much as it had when originally written. Regardless of your position, we would highly recommend this book.

Lead On! Kriston Haynes

We are very excited to announce this month's Lead On! Leader, Kriston Haynes. Kriston is a teacher in North Carolina and speaks about her experience as an RA and RD and how it has helped her become the person she is today. Find her story in our Lead On! Section.
